Displacement

This informal settlement is situated 8km to the south of Jalalabad. Unlike many other sites in the region, this settlement consists of privately rented concrete houses. However, landlords do not receive financial compensation. All residents are from Pashtun communities, with IDPs moving from Kunar, Paktya and other areas of Nangarhar province, while all returnees previously lived in Pakistan.

The settlement was first established in 2002 by 700 returnee households from Peshawar, Pakistan. A significant influx occurred in 2008 with 2,000 returnee households joining the site, again from Peshawar. In 2010, 600 households arrived from Punjab, Pakistan, followed by 400 households from the F.A.T.A. region of Pakistan in 2012. Throughout 2016, the first IDP households arrived, including 700 IDP households from Nangarhar, Kunar and Paktya provinces, as well as 600 returnee households from Pakistan.

Residents reportedly plan to stay in the settlement as it offers a general sense of security and some, limited access to medical facilities in Chaparhar district.
