Displacement

As one of two informal settlements situated close to Hewadwal Block, Chori Froshan Camp is a small site built on land owned by the Government of Afghanistan. Residents do not currently pay rent. Pashtun communities comprise 65% of the population, with the remaining 35% consisting of Tajik communities. Most of the settlement is populated by IDPs travelling from Kunduz and Laghman and Nangarhar, although 10% of the site is comprised of returnees from Pakistan.

The first wave of 40 households founded the site in 2011, with IDPs travelling from Surkrod, Nangarhar. The settlement was stable until 2016 when 50 IDP households from Char Darah, Kunduz and Alishang, Laghman and 10 returnee households from Peshawar, Pakistan joined the site. There is space for the settlement to expand, with the population expected to grow in 2017.

Residents reportedly do not intend to leave as they have a perceived sense of security associated with living close to other settlements, and they feel they have no alternative shelter options available.
