Displacement

The land on which Daud Khan Town Camp informal settlement is situated is provided for free by the Afghan Ministry of Defence. The population is mostly comprised of Pashtun communities, though 10% are Tajik. Most of the houses are occupied by returnees from Pakistan, although 3 houses are occupied by IDPs from Kapisa, Kunduz and Badakhshan.

The first 42 households moved into the settlement in 2002, having returned from Peshawar, Pakistan. The camp remained stable until 2016, when one household from Kapisa travelled to the settlement early in the year and a further two households joined in July from Kunduz and Badakhshan. The settlement is now at capacity and the Ministry of Defence will not permit any more residents to join the site.

Residents reportedly plan to stay in the settlement for the foreseeable future as they feel they have nowhere else to go, although the Ministry of Defence reportedly intends to reclaim the land in 2017.
