Displacement

As one of three sites in Qalai Barqi, Gul Agha Herati Camp is an informal settlement in which residents live in houses dispersed amongst the host community. These properties are provided by the Government of Afghanistan and residents do not currently pay rent. The majority of the population is comprised of Tajik communities, with 10% of the site populated by Pashtuns. This settlement houses both IDPs from Herat and Kunduz provinces, and returnees from Pakistan and Iran.

Gul Agha Herati Camp was first established in 2002, when 109 IDP households travelled from Injil, Herat, from which the settlement gets its name. The site was stable until 2016 when 12 IDP households from Emam Saheb, Kunduz province and 5 returnee households from Peshawar, Pakistan and Tehran, Iran, joined the site in October. However, the land is now at capacity, with no new households able to join in 2017.

Nearly all residents reportedly plan to stay in the settlement as it is secure and there is access to essential services, including food and health care.
