Displacement

This informal settlement occupies a small plot of land behind the police station in Kabul's Police District 4 and is next to a market used for vehicles and transport. The land was provided by the Government of Afghanistan and residents are not required to pay rent. All residents are from Tajik communities and all households previously lived in Pakistan.

The site was established in 2002 when a group of 22 households returned from Peshawar, Pakistan. These residents have remained in the settlement since that time, and there have been no subsequent influxes due to the small size of the site.

As the settlement is free, residents reported plans to remain in the site. The site also provides a sense of security provided by proximity to the police station.
