Displacement

Located in Kabul's central District 10, this small informal settlement is situated behind Aria Town. The land is privately owned, although residents are not required to pay rental fees. The entire population is Pashtun and all households have returned to Afghanistan from Pakistan.

Residents joined this site in three waves, with all returnees travelling from Peshawar. The first 10 households arrived in 2005, after which the settlement remained stable until 2010, when an additional 17 households joined. The settlement experienced another period of stability before the arrival of 3 households in 2016.

Despite space for the settlement to expand, the landlord will not allow any more households to move into the area. Residents reportedly do not plan to leave the settlement as they feel they have no alternative accommodation.
